I-Ching & The World of Metaphysics

2012 syndrome

The world will end in 2012. That's what movies and books are saying, the following books in particular - The Mayan Factor: Path Beyond Technology, Maya Cosmogenesis 2012, King of Terror 1999 and Book of Nostradamus.

Is this a repeat of the Y2K scare or will it be a self-fulfilling prophecy?

Ask scientists and they will tell you nothing will happen in 2012. Giant solar storms predicted for 2012 will probably cause some interference with satellite communications but such cycles are normal every 11 years. Again, no big deal.

But hang on.

In Chinese metaphysical analysis, 2012 signals an unusual event for the earth. The heavy water element would cause three main events:

A unprecedented flood that would lead to horrific consequences such as outbreak of diseases.

The structure of the earth could be badly eroded.

Dramatic changes in the political arena, especially in Hong Kong and the mainland.

I do not dare to predict further here.

The unusual weather is a result of the environment or Mother Nature being exploited or damaged.

Remember that humans live in accordance with the four seasons within certain parameters of comfort zones. This comfort zone would change in 2012 and beyond due to changes in the weather.

How you react to these changes depends on your personal fortitude. As humans can adapt, this should not be a big problem.

Beyond that, however, we should start thinking about loving the environment and caring about our community more. Our passion and love for living things should not be eroded by economic development and vested interests.

In another translation, the volatile weather will affect the property market. So for those who are thinking about buying, this is the time to do it. But analyze your own luck or financial ability before making any decision.

Relax, the world will not end in 2012 but be prepared for a rollercoaster year of diseases and political upheaval.

Thought of the week: Love your family, your community and, above all, your country.
