

Dragon Searching Process: Another example of filial values shown by ancient Chinese

It is the intention to search for the right solution and the right answer and be it the right solution is the right meridian spot! The dragon trail is not easy to find at times tedious.

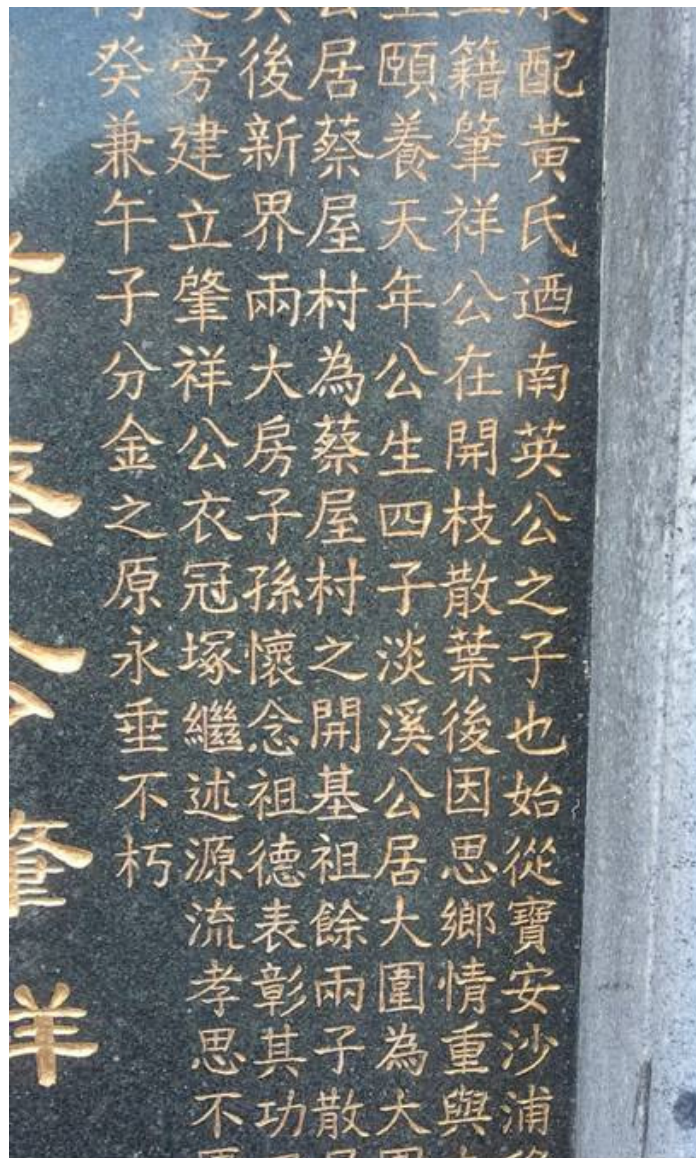

It is unwise to act like a real master when you are only half barrel full. Mind you ancient Master or scholar always do not write down their essence of techniques for two reasons, one, they often oral teach the essence to disciples and, they afraid that such techniques might be on the hand of the bad-hearted people. God knows the real essence, but that's always one way we can find out, that's to study the ancient tombs done by prominent masters. Such works cannot be camouflaged and have to be authentic. Their skills and their texts could have differences but only the works (tombs site) can be trusted. The core of the text is to narrow down the focus on the Xuan Kong techniques.

Location: Yuen Long, Tai Tong, 元郎 Date: July 2010 年

Short synopsis about the tomb writing: The son of the tomb came to Hong Kong and made a good living later he went back to search for his deceased father clothings (衣冠冢) and came back to buried here in Hong Kong.

From the tomb description we can emotionally felt that such filial devotion was definitely should be pass on from generation from generation to come.

Hope you enjoy the dragon searching process!

By Kerby Kuek

郭翹峰

Chief Disciple of Xuan Kong Zhang Pai 玄空掌派首席弟子